Dr. María Soriano-Carot earned her Ph.D. in Genetics and Molecular Biology at the University of Valencia. In 2013 she moved to the United States to work as a postdoctoral researcher at Boston University, where she studied the signaling mechanism in response to DNA damage and oxidative stress.

During her stay in Boston, María developed high interest in mentoring and career development, becoming an active member of the BU Postdoctoral Mentoring Circles, Ixf Consulting Programs, the MIT European Career Fair Organizational Team and the board of the Association of Spanish Scientist in USA. In 2015 María cofounded IMFAHE, and since then codirects the Foundation and its IMP-Biomedicine specialty. In early 2016, María moved to London to work as Outreach Scientist at the biotech nonprofit organization, Addgene. Currently, María is dedicated to design, develop and implement career development strategies and international educative programs at IMFAHE.
